ARMY NAVY COUNTRY CLUB

Gracing over 500 acres of rolling, wooded, landscape at sites in both Arlington and Fairfax, Virginia, the Army Navy Country Club challenges Members and guests with 54 championship golf holes, award-winning tennis facility with 32 tennis courts, 6 swimming pools, a fitness center, and golf and tennis Pro Shops. The 27-hole Arlington property sits on 253 acres of the Club's 500 acres.

In the summer of 1861, the rout of the Federal Army in the First Battle of Bull Run had left the nation's capital virtually defenseless. With the victorious Confederate Army encamped only a few miles away, President Lincoln concentrated on erecting suitable defenses, and within a short time, a project was underway which, in the next four years, would make Washington, D.C. "the most heavily fortified city in the nation."

Commanding the highest ground of all the forts on the Virginia side was Fort Richardson, sited on a crest which would eventually comprise part of the Army Navy Country Club. Today, only remnants of Fort Richardson's parapets and ditches remain, flanking the Red 9 green; they tend to go unnoticed except for when an approach shot is shanked or hooked. Sixty-three years later, the same land was going to take a very different military direction. There was much discussion during the summer and early fall of 1924 about the need on the part of Army, Navy, and Marine Corps officers stationed in the Washington area for outdoor recreation facilities. This need sprang from the realization that such officers, with modest salaries and generally without other means, were hard put to meet expenses for the necessities of life, let alone afford the high initiation fees and dues associated with membership in existing private country clubs of the area. On November 11th, 1924, the Army Navy and Marine Corps Country Club was incorporated. The name was changed to Army Navy Country Club in 1930.

Since its ground breaking ceremony at the current Arlington site on 5 August 1927, Members have included Major General John A. Lejeune, USMC; Admiral Chester W. Nimitz, USN; General Omar Bradley, USA; and Presidents Dwight D. Eisenhower, John F. Kennedy, Lyndon B. Johnson, Richard M. Nixon, and William J. Clinton.
